Your letter has made me so happy. I've been so haunted by the fear that you moved at like it. I never wrote a word without thinking of you & Julian & have so longed to do something that you'd both like. As for thanking me — well, when you've given me Julian & Quentin — Angelica —

I'm sorry the typing in the last part is awful & some pages make complete nonsense.

Perhaps you & D will come over.

Leonard's account of what was said on the telephone is of course quite different from yours. He certainly told me that you had asked him to find out the address & had arranged that he should ring you up late. So we cant understand why you should have been surprised.

What I dont understand is why there need have been such a fuss to find a place for them in Sussex. They've got their own house at Rodmell, & if they didnt want to be in London could easily have gone there. I admit I find it very annoying to have them in the village, but it's a great relief that its only for a short time. From what you said I thought they meant to stay indefinitely.

I'm sorry if you thought I was unnecessarily angry. I dont suppose you could possibly have prevented them coming. Once Helen knew about the cottage it was unavoidable.
